

Comair eyes Saint Helena

SAINT HELENA | The remote South Atlantic island of Saint Helena, where French emperor Napoleon Bonaparte was exiled, is to get its first commercial air service, officials have announced. The government of Saint Helena, a British territory, said on Monday that final negotiations were under way for Comair to fly once a week from Johannesburg to a new airport due to open next year. AFP

This material has been copied under a DALRO licence and is not for resale or retransmission.