

St Helena expecting a boom

JAMESTOWN | Investment opportunities and private sector growth on St Helena are expected to boom in the lead-up to the opening of the South Atlantic island's first airport, due in December 2015. Building has already begun following the signing of the construction contract at the end of last year between the British government and Basil Read, said St Helena tourism development executive Mike Dean. St Helena can only be reached by boat. Business Day Writer